Global Mayors Gather at Vatican Pushing Climate Deal

Sacramento—Sixty mayors from around the world gathered with religious leaders at the Pontifical Academy of Science on July 21 ahead of a November global climate change conference in Paris.

At the end, each participant signed a final declaration that emerged from the meeting. It said “human-induced climate change is a scientific reality and its effective control is a moral imperative for humanity.”

Amongst Americans in attendance were San Francisco Mayor Ed Lee, New York Mayor Bill de Blasio, and California Governor Jerry Brown.

In a blistering speech, Brown denounced climate change naysayers. Meanwhile, de Blasio announced an effort for his city to reduce greenhouse emissions 40 percent by 2030.

Cardinal Newman Breaks Ground on Science Building

Santa Rosa—On June 29, the Feast of Sts. Peter and Paul, Cardinal Newman High School President Laura M. Held announced plans and broke ground for a new science building on the campus. Construction will begin by the end of October or early November, and it will stand roughly between the lunch tables and the school gymnasium.

According to a news release, the “new, state of the art science complex on campus [will] house three new classrooms and labs. Occupancy is scheduled for January 2016, in time to begin the second school semester. New class offerings are made possible with the opening of this $2.1 million facility, including “Principles of Engineering and Anatomy for Sports Medicine.”

Before the ground breaking ceremony, President Held told attendees, “Today we have an extraordinary opportunity for Cardinal Newman to create an even greater atmosphere for learning and investigating and enhancing the school’s Catholic identity and park like appearance of the school grounds.”

Assisted Suicide Bill Dead for the Year

Sacramento—After being passed by California’s state Senate, SB 128, the bill that would legalize physician-assisted suicide, was suddenly pulled by its proponents from a required hearing by the Assembly Health Committee hearing on June 23.

“The postponement of the Assembly Health Committee hearing on SB 128 is only a brief respite,” California Assemblyman Freddie Rodriguez, D-Pomona, who worked as an emergency medical technician, said Monday. ‘Letting folks have the opportunity for Cardinal Newman to create an even greater atmosphere for learning and investigating and enhancing the school’s Catholic identity and park like appearance of the school grounds.”

Then on July 7, the measure’s sponsors pulled the bill. It will not be considered again this year.

The Sacramento Bee reported that, “Proponents were not able to sway a majority of members on the Assembly Health Committee, some of whom pointed to personal experiences that counseled them against backing the bill. ‘You’ve got to look at what I’ve done before the Legislature ... working to help save and protect peoples’ lives, giving that option—a second chance at life,’ Assemblyman de Blasio announced an effort for his city to reduce greenhouse emissions 40 percent by 2030.

Longtime Newman Groundskeeper Retires

On June 30, Avid Valentin, longtime groundskeeper at Cardinal Newman High School put on his red “CN” shirt as an employee for the last time.

Said Principal Graham Rutherford, “Avid Valentin tended to Cardinal Newman as if we were his garden, each student and staff member a living part of his work. Working with him to increase the Catholic identity and park like appearance of the school has been one best parts of my time at Cardinal Newman.”

It has been an impressive journey for the Puerto Rican native with an eighth grade education.

The son of an Italian immigrant father and a Puerto Rican mother, he first moved to America when he was seven, living in New York City. His father—who taught him his most cherished lesson: “The truth is so easy to remember, son”—died not too long ago.

Planned Parenthood Charged With Illegally Selling Aborted Baby Body Parts

Washington, DC (CNA/EWTN News).- Abortion giant Planned Parenthood is facing harsh criticism after the release of footage allegedly showing its top doctor describing how the organization offers body parts from aborted babies for money.

“A lot of people want intact hearts these days, they’re looking for specific nodes,” Dr. Deborah Nucatola, Planned Parenthood Federation of America’s senior medical director, appears to say in a recently released undercover video.

She said “people wanted lungs” and “always as many intact livers as possible.”

The video was released July 14 by the Center for Medical Progress (CMP), a non-profit group focused on medical ethics. It is the first in the center’s “Human Capital” series, a nearly three-year-long investigative study of Planned Parenthood.
The Church’s Richest Treasure

In his 2007 post-synodal apostolic exhortation about Holy Communion, Sacramentum Caritatis (“The Sacra- ment of Charity”), Pope emeritus Benedict XVI wrote something to which I want to draw your attention:

“Emphasizing the importance of the ars celebrandi [the art of celebrating] also leads to an appreciation of the value of the liturgical norms. The ars celebrandi should foster a sense of the sacred and the use of outward signs which help to cultivate this sense, such as, for example, the harmony of the rite, the liturgical vestments, the furnishings, and the sacred space.”

“The eucharistic celebration is enhanced when priests and liturgical leaders are committed to making known the current liturgical texts and norms, making available the great riches found in the General Instruction of the Roman Missal, and the Order of Readings for Mass.

“Perhaps we take it for granted that our ecclesial communities already know and appreciate these resources, but this is not always the case. These texts contain riches which have preserved and expressed the faith and experience of the People of God over its 2,000 year history.

“Equally important for a correct ars celebrandi is an attentiveness to the various kinds of language that the liturgy employs: words and music, gestures and silence, movement, the liturgical colors of the vestments. By its very nature the liturgy operates on different levels of communication which enable it to engage the whole human person.

“The simplicity of its gestures and the sobriety of its orderly sequence of signs communicate and inspire more than any contrived and inappropriate additions.

“Attention and fidelity to the specific structure of the rite express both a recognition of the nature of Eucharist as a gift and, on the part of the minister, a docile openness to receiving this ineffable gift” (No. 40).

I include paragraph number 40 of the document in its entirety because it has something to say to each of us. To me as bishop celebrant, it is a challenge to renew and amend as necessary my attentiveness and fidelity to the various rites that I have the privilege of celebrating.

For the priests and deacons perhaps the invitation to attentiveness to words and music, gestures and silence, movement and colors is an opportunity for reflection and growth.

For the lay faithful, Pope emeritus Benedict encourages a deeper knowledge of the liturgical texts and norms.

He prudently notes, “Perhaps we take it for granted that our ecclesial communities already know and appreciate these resources, but this is not always the case.”

“Thus there is a responsibility on the part of the bishop and the priests to help the People of God know and appreciate the “great riches found,” for example, “in the General Instruction of the Roman Missal.”

The Most Holy Eucharist is the richest treasure of the Church, and the liturgical norms are intended to help assure a proper reverence and devotion while attending to this great mystery.

From the Bishop

Bishop Robert F. Vasa is the sixth bishop of the Diocese of Santa Rosa.

En su exhortación apostólica post-sinodal sobre la Sagra-da Comunión, Sacramentum Caritatis (Sacramento de la Caridad), el Papa emérito Benedicto XVI escribió algo sobre lo cual quisiera llamarle la atención:

“Por consiguiente, al subrayar la importancia del ars celebrandi, se pone de relieve el valor de las normas litúrgicas. El ars celebrandi ha de favorecer el sentido de lo sagrado y el uso de las formas exteriores que educan para ello, como, por ejemplo, la armonía del rito, los ornamentos litúrgicos, la decoración y el lugar sagrado.

“Favorece la celebración eucarística que los sac-erdotes y los responsables de la pastoral litúrgica se esfuerzen en dar a conocer los libros litúrgicos vigen-tes y las respectivas normas, resaltando las grandes riquezas de la Ordenación General del Misl Romano y de la Ordenación de las Lecturas de la Misa.

“En las comunidades eclesiásticas se da quizás por descontado que se conocen y aprecian, pero a menudo no es así. En realidad, son textos que contienen rique-zas que custodian y expresan la fe, así como el camino del Pueblo de Dios a lo largo de dos milenios de historia.

“Para una adecuada ars celebrandi es igualmente importante la atención a todas las formas de lenguaje previstas por la liturgia: palabra y canto, gestos y silencios, movimiento del cuerpo, colores litúrgicos de los ornamentos. En efecto, la liturgia tiene por su naturaleza una variedad de formas de comunicación que abarcan todo el ser humano.

“La sencillez de los gestos y la sobriedad de los signos, realizados en el orden y en los tiempos previstos, comunican y atraen más que la artificiosidad de añadiduras inoportunas.

“La atención y la obediencia a la estructura propia del ritual, a la vez que manifiestan el reconocimiento del carácter de la Eucaristía como don, expresan la dis-posición del ministro para acoger con docié gratitud dicho don inefable. (Sacramentum Caritatis No. 40)”

Estoy incluyendo en su totalidad el No. 40 de dicho documento porque tiene algo que decir a cada uno de nosotros. Para mí, como Obispo celebrante, es un desafío para renovar y enmendar según el caso, mi atención y fidelidad a los distintos ritos, que tengo el privilegio de estar celebrando.

Para los sacerdotes y diáconos, quizás sea la invitación a estar atentos a las palabras y la música, los gestos y el silencio, movimientos y colores, como una oportunidad para reflexionar y crecer.

Para los fieles laicos, el Papa emérito Benedicto lo está alentando a alcanzar un conocimiento más profundo de las normas y textos litúrgicos.

Con prudencia nos dice: “Quizá con demasiada frecuencia damos por descontado que nuestras comunidades eclesiásticas ya conocen y aprecian estos recursos, pero esto no siempre es el caso.”

“Así es que existe una responsabilidad del Obispo y los sacerdotes para ayudar al Pueblo de Dios, para que lleguen a conocer y apreciar "las grandes valores", por ejemplo, en la Ordenación General del Misl Romano.

La Santísima Eucaristía es el Tesoro más valioso de la Iglesia y el fondo de las normas litúrgicas es ayudar a asegurar la devoción y reverencia apropiadas, mientras estemos participando en este gran misterio.

Pope Says to Educate Girls About Their Vocation

CNA/EWTN News

Vatican City (CNA/EWTN News)—In a special audience, Pope Francis said girls must be educated women for their vocation and responsibilities in a world of ideologies that work against God and treat women as inferior.

"Today it is very important that womanhood be properly appreciated ... we are in a world where we see the spread of ideologies contrary to nature and God's design for the family and marriage," Pope Francis said June 26.

"It is therefore necessary to educate girls not only to the beauty and grandeur of their vocation as women, in a fair and differentiated relationship between man and woman, but also to take on important responsibilities in the Church and in society."

He continued, saying that “education is the indispensable means for enabling girls to grow into active and responsible women, proud and happy in the faith in Christ they live in their everyday life. In this way they will participate in the construction of a world imbued with the Gospel.”

In his remarks at Vatican City’s Clementine Hall, the Pope said Catholic Girl Scout organizations can play a major role in improving the situation of women in countries where they are treated as inferiors, exploited or mistreated.

Pope Francis addressed delegates from the International Catholic Conference of Guiding. The organization supports Catholic girl scouts and girl guides in 49 countries.

The Conference gathered in Rome on the fiftieth anniversary of its founding to reflect on the theme “Living as a guide for the joy of the gospel.”

His Holiness especially encouraged Catholic Girl Scout leaders to teach girls in a way so they are open to the consecrated life (i.e., being a religious Sister), saying that the scouting movement has been very fruitful in this area.

The Pope’s comments about ideologies contrary to God’s design for marriage came hours before the Supreme Court of the United States ruled same-sex marriage is a constitutional right.

World Meeting of Families—
“Love is Our Mission”

by Judy Barrett

In September thousands of lay people, priests, religious, and bishops from around the world will gather in Phila delphia for the triennial World Meeting of Families, initi dated in 1984 by Pope St. John Paul II to highlight the digni ty and importance of the family in human culture. The multi-day congress will feature an international line tup of speakers on issues that affect family life. In addition to these sessions, the World Meeting of Fami lies will draw multitudes—some estimate as many as two million—to the papal Mass and “Festival of Families” fea turing entertainment, arts, food, and activities for all ages.

What happens at the World Meeting of Families is important to Catholics throughout the world. Strong families promote good culture. Some studies say the single greatest impact on the health of a nation is the health of the family, with “health of a nation” defined as a nation’s overall socio-economic condition.

It is in the family that faith is communicated to children in word and deed. It is in the family that we first learn about love, value, and security. The family is the first teacher of how to treat (or not to treat) one another.

A snapshot of the health of families in the United States and particularly in California does not present a rosy picture: Regular church attendance is declining in America. Religious liberty is being pushed to the margins and out of the public square. Five of the nine United States Supreme Court justices recently issued a decision redefining mar riage that will have far-reaching consequences on how Catholics live their lives in an increasingly secular culture.

The National Center for Family Homelessness ranks California forty-eighth on a population-adjusted scale for the risk of child homelessness (with 50 being the worst). California is a hub for human trafficking. Absent fathers, divorce, pornography, substance abuse, and out of wedlock births put stress on families.

Perhaps the World Meeting of Families in September will start some creative conversations for strengthening family life. Everyone can participate, even those of us who cannot travel to Philadelphia. Visit www.worldmeet ing2015.org for resources.

A preparatory catechesis Love is Our Mission: The Family Fully Alive is available at low cost in print, as an e-book or to download free in English, Spanish, and several other languages. Educational materials for pre-K through Grade Twelve are available to download.

Confirmed Priest Abuse Allegations
in Single Digits for 2014

Washington, DC (CNA/EWTN News)—There are tens of thousands of Catholic clergy in the United States, but the United States bishops’ latest report says there were fewer than 10 substantiated allegations of clergy sex abuse committed in the 2013-2014 audit period.

In addition, almost all clergy, lay, and other workers and volunteers at Catholic institutions have undergone safe environment training.

Archbishop Joseph E. Kurtz of Louisville, Kentucky, president of the US Conference of Catholic Bishops, said the bishops’ “first priority” is healing for victims and survivors of abuse.

“We join Pope Francis in his desire that the response of the Church be pastoral and immediate,” the archbishop said in the preface to the annual report on the imple mentation of the bishops’ Charter for the Protection of Children and Young People.

“Though our promise to protect and heal made in 2002 remains strong, we must not become complacent with what has been accomplished,” Archbishop Kurtz said in an announcement from the US bishops’ conference.

The report was prepared by the bishops’ Secretariat of Child and Youth Protection for the National Review Board that monitors the Catholic Church’s efforts to respond to and prevent sex abuse.

The report uses two sets of data: One from the George town University-based Center for Applied Research in the Apostolate (CARA), and another from reports submitted by the auditors at Stonebridge Business Partners to the secretariat.

The audit said all new allegations were reported to the authorities.

The Catholic bishops’ abuse protection efforts include safe environment training programs for children and for adults who come into contact with children.

Almost 4.5 million children have received this train ing, as have 99 percent of priests, deacons, and educa tors. Over 1.9 million volunteers at Catholic institutions have received the training, as have over 250,000 other employees and over 6,500 candidates for ordination.
The percentages of adult training completion range from 97-99 percent.

CARA surveyed all 195 dioceses and eparchies in the US except one, while one diocese and five eparchies did not participate in the Stonebridge audit.

From July 2013 to June 2014, the Church has spent over $31.6 million on safe environment training programs, background checks, and other protective efforts, as well as $119 million on legal settlements for abuse victims, therapy for victims, attorneys’ fees, and other allegation-related costs.

CORRECTION

North Coast Catholic’s July issue’s “News Briefs” section featured a story about an Assyrian Christian fighter beheading an ISIS jihadist (see p. 17, bottom of the middle column). Some took its inclusion as a mark of approval of this man’s deed, of applauding his eye-for-an-eye behavior.
Nothing could be further from the truth. The story was included because it was so shocking and utterly unbelievable that a man claiming faith in Jesus would do this. No approval was intended. Apologies to any who thought there was.
Truth Does Not Change

Did you see the Letters to the Editor in newspapers regarding Bishop Vasa’s response to the Supreme Court’s legalization of same sex unions? First, here is his statement:

“Years ago, in the Dred Scott decision, the US Supreme Court ruled that blacks were not persons. This was despite the fact that each justice presumably believed all of mankind is created in God’s image (cf. Genesis 1:26). Similarly today’s justices have erred with the Obergfell case just like their predecessors did with Dred Scott, by making an egregious error in moral judgment.

“While five Justices may have changed marriage’s legal definition, they can never change its moral definition. As such this truism must stand, the moral definition of marriage as a union between one man and one woman—that is ordered not only toward the couple but the procreation and education of children—remains unchanged.

“Just as Roe v. Wade did not settle the abortion question nearly two generations ago, Obergfell v. Hodges does not settle the marriage question today. The Supreme Court did not settle the marriage question today.

“For the Court was wrong in 1973 with Roe. It is wrong again in 2015 with Obergfell.

“The letter writers essentially responded by saying, ‘How can he be so uncaring? So disaffirming? Doesn’t he realize what he is doing to people?’

“Closely reread what the bishop said. Notice how he did not personally attack anyone or even say, ‘All homosexuals are bad and damned to hell.’ Neither does the Church, although some letter writers seemed to believe this.

“Bishop Vasa’s statement simply reflects that he is a Catholic bishop who takes his vocation seriously. Proclaiming Church teaching is his duty. There is no liberal Church teaching. There is simply Church teaching, and that is what he affirms.

“He is not to change Church doctrine, nor to reject Church doctrine, nor to soft peddle Church doctrine, nor to tell us that he does not believe Church doctrine. Rather he is to proclaim and teach Church doctrine as handed down to us from Christ and the apostles.

“Indeed Vatican II said bishops ‘are authentic teachers’ of the apostolic faith ‘endowed with the authority of Christ’ (Lumen Gentium, no. 25, emphasis added).

“Today’s Supreme Court justices do not change Church doctrine like Bishop Vasa. We also believe the Faith today is the same one handed down to us through the ages from Christ to the apostles to their successors the bishops, by the safeguarding of the Holy Spirit. What it teaches therefore is true because objective successors the bishops, by the safeguarding of the Holy Spirit. What it teaches therefore is true because objective successors the bishops, by the safeguarding of the Holy Spirit. What it teaches therefore is true because objective successors the bishops, by the safeguarding of the Holy Spirit.

“Now that five Justices have changed marriage’s legal definition, have ‘raised clamor against truth,’ what does that mean in light of Bishop Vasa’s statement?

“Quoting St. Augustine, St. Thomas Aquinas wrote ‘a law that is not just, seems to be no law at all. Wherefore such laws do not bind in conscience …’

“Secondly, laws may be unjust through being opposed to the divine good and … contrary to the divine law: and laws of this kind must nowhere be observed, because, as stated in Acts 5:29, ‘We ought to obey God rather than man.’

“Catechism no. 2242 affirms the Obergfell decision allows us to obey God rather than man, for the Supreme Court has ruled contrary to divine law.

“This is where the Church—yes, even our current Popes—stands. Many do not like this. Such discontent is not new. Jesus’ teaching challenged people in His time, as well.

“My many of His disciples, when they heard it, said, ‘This is a hard saying; who can accept it? But Jesus … said to them, “Do you take offense at this? …” After this many of His disciples drew back and no longer went about with Him. Jesus said to the twelve, “Will you also go away?” Simon Peter (on whom Christ founded His Church) answered Him, “Lord to whom shall we go? You have the words of everlasting life” (John 6:60-61, 66-68).

“How will you choose? Where will you go?”

Brian O’Neil Communications director for the diocese

Dear Aunt Bea

I’m 15. My best friend has been “hooking up” at parties. We were both raised Catholic, but now she’s telling me the Church is stupid and wrong about sex. She tells me God wants us to do what makes us happy and have fun as long as we use protection so we don’t get pregnant or get STD. I don’t know. I like boys (a lot!), and I am curious. My mom would be horrified, and it would probably kill my dad. LOL. Still, a lot of what my friend says makes sense. Why should I listen to a bunch of celibate old men like our bishop and not my best friend?

15 and Curious

Dear 15:

If you saw me, you might not believe it, but I was 15 once, too! And I felt the same, exact way about guys.

Looking back, I see how the decisions I made then affect my life now. You don’t have that option yet, so let me tell you: “Hooking up” has consequences.

God created us with hearts, often tender hearts, and to protect our hearts, He has shown us how to live. Those “celibate old men” who help us with this were 15 once, too. They know how often needs guidance from those who have experienced in life in ways you haven’t to navigate the ways of the heart and to understand the effects and even penalties of sin. (Yes, “hooking up” is a mortal sin, for it goes against the laws God has given us.)

The drive to be physical with someone can be so strong! It is not impossible to resist. That’s because God made physical intimacy something good and beautiful, and we can be forgiven for questioning why we should have to deprive ourselves of it.

But sex is not only good and beautiful, it is holy. It is what binds a husband and wife together. It brings forth children for that couple to raise in an atmosphere of love and security. Even though following God’s plan for a joyfully married marriage seems harsh or impossible now, it will, I promise, make your life much easier in the long run.

Also God does, indeed, want your happiness. Hooking up can’t give us that. Ever. It can give you a momentary thrill but not happiness. Do you want a cheap thrill or to be happy? Going God’s way leads to happiness. Going against His way leads to unhappiness. Which do you want? Certainly happiness can never come from anything that would “horrify” your mom or “kill” your dad.

Remember, God wants for you to save your heart and your chastity for the right person: The man you marry. Be patient. (Easier said than done, I know!)

Also, no offense, but are you putting the cart before the horse? That is, how much time have you put into prayerfully discerning God’s plan for you?

If you haven’t put any time into this, start. If you have, and you have discerned His plan for you is marriage, imagine how glad you will be you saved yourself for your husband. He is out there somewhere right now, probably having the same thoughts and struggles you are. Pray for him that he is asking for advice about what to do with his emotions and feelings. Pray that he prays for you.

Just remember: You will never regret keeping your chastity, but there are many chances you’ll regret following your friend’s example.

Ask IPS
by William McKenna, MS

Q: How can a family heal from a divorce? My brother’s marriage just broke up and I’m both worried about him, and my nieces and nephews. What can they practically do to remain stable?

A: First, let me express my sympathies and prayers for your brother and family. As I’ve mentioned previously, separation and divorce affects everyone in the immediate family. In a recent General Audience, Pope Francis said, “We talk a lot of behavioral problems, mental health, well-being of the child, anxiety of parents and children. But do we know what a wound in the soul is? Do we feel the weight of the mountain that crushes the soul of a child, in families where members treat each other badly and hurt one another?”

Spouses may see divorce as a betrayal of what marriage means, and even begin to display symptoms of depression, anxiety, and post-traumatic stress disorder. Children can perceive it as emotional abandonment, and once they internalize the situation, there is a good chance that they will begin to act out to express their pain. Family therapy can be helpful in these situations, with a focused goal of building resilience or a way to cope with the situation and move forward.

What can families concretely do to build resilience and heal?

Facilitating Resilience and Recovery Following Trauma, edited by Lori A. Zoellner and Norah C. Feeny (2014), says that on the individual level, flexible problem-solving skills, ability to self-regulate emotions, a healthy attitude about yourself, and a belief that life has meaning all go a long way in building factors of resilience after a trauma.

On the family level, connections to other adults and friendship networks are important. Spirituality, faith, and religious affiliations have also been recognized as helpful.

Additionally, connections to organizations that promote the community and integration locally within your community can provide opportunities for growth.

As you can see, there are a variety of factors that influence whether or not a person can be resilient, but a person does not need to possess every listed factor in order to begin healing.

For example, even if a person lacks positive beliefs about themselves, they can make up for this by having a supportive kinship network. For a family suffering from divorce, one of the most important things is to surround each spouse and the children with a loving and emotionally warm community oriented to the overall well-being of the family. Doing so will buttress the family against feelings of loneliness, anger, and actions that could eventually leave family members in difficult situations.

Archbishop of Canterbury
Not Amused by Episcopalians

Salt Lake City—Just days after the Supreme Court of the United States legalized same sex unions, the Episcopal General Convention—the Anglican Communities governing body of bishops—voted overwhelmingly to allow same sex couples religious weddings. The vote was 129-25, with five abstaining.

According to The Associated Press, "The new rule eliminates gender-specific language from church laws on marriage so that same-sex couples could have religious weddings. Instead of ‘husband’ and ‘wife,’ for example, the new church law will refer to ‘the couple.’ Under the new rules, clergy can decline to perform the ceremonies." This makes the Episcopalians the third mainline Protestant body to condone same sex unions after the Presbyterian Church in the United States and the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America. Both of the latter allow each congregation to choose whether to bless such nuptials.

Although same sex unions are legal in the United Kingdom, the Church of England—the parent body of the Episcopal Church of the United States (TEC)—is not required to and does not perform such nuptials. And not every TEC diocese will comply with the Convention’s decision. Furthermore, “The United Methodist Church, by far the largest mainline Protestant body, has intervened with a rare and strong public criticism of TEC’s action. TEC has been strained since Episcopalians in 2003 elected the first openly gay bishop, V. Gene Robinson, to lead the Diocese of New Hampshire. ”

"The Anglican Communion (has) an 80 million-member global fellowship of churches. Ties among Anglicans have been strained since Episcopalians in 2003 elected Bishop Gene Robinson, who lived openly with his male partner, to lead the Diocese of New Hampshire." Robinson is now retired.

The July 1 vote did nothing to ease the situation. According to Christianity Today, "The Archbishop of Canterbury has intervened with a rare and strong public criticism of The Episcopal Church of the US after its bishops voted to change the definition of marriage so clergy can conduct same-sex marriages.

"The Most Rev. Justin Welby expressed ‘deep concern’ about the ‘stress’ for the Anglican Communion after TEC’s House of Bishops took its action. Part of the problem is that the archbishop is trying to minimize the unity of an already fractious Communion, where North American congregations have openly revolted against Anglicanism’s tilt toward ideals championed by liberal secularism versus what orthodox Christianity has against Anglicanism’s tilt toward ideals championed by liberal secularism versus what orthodox Christianity has.

"This may be a reference to the Anglican-Catholic dialogue, which is made difficult when the Anglicans make changes that make reunion ever more unlikely. Welby is also said to be concerned that the Church will once more see to be looking inwards to its own struggles while the wider world is in turmoil from terrorism, climate extremes, economic crises, and other trauma."

As much as Lambeth and TEC have tried to be in in and of the world in order to remain relevant and appealing to its members and unchurched individuals it hopes to attract, its numbers have fallen.

TEC sold its New York City headquarters because it could no longer afford it. Furthermore according to beliefnet.com, “Among the old mainstream denominations reporting to the National Council of Churches, the Episcopal Church suffered the worst loss of membership from 1992-2002—plunging from 3.4 million members to 2.3 million for a 32 percent loss. In the NCC’s 2012 yearbook, the Episcopal Church admitted another 2.71 percent annual membership loss."

Conversely, the Center for Applied Research in the Apostolate (CARA) a Georgetown University-based think tank, wrote in 2014, “Ordinations to the [Catholic] priesthood and seminarians preparing for this vocation are up. Ordinations have increased by 12 percent since 2000 and the number of seminarians enrolled has increased by 3 percent.

"The parish-affiliated Catholic population has grown by 11 percent and the self-identified Catholic population has grown by 7 percent since 2000. Overall, the self-identified Catholic population has added 5 million. A significant portion of this growth has come from former-born Catholic adults which have increased by 4.4 million. CARA’s survey-based estimates of Mass attendance show a slight uptick from 22 percent attending weekly to 24 percent. With a growing Catholic population that means nationally the Church has seen the number of Catholics who go to church every week increase by more than 2.6 million since 2000 (+17 percent)."

“This isn’t to say the Church hasn’t lost members. It has. But it is not the bleeding experienced by either the TEC or the Anglican Communion, which is also hemorrhaging members."

England, Welby “conceded that TEC is entitled to address issues appropriate to its own context, but Archbishop Welby said this latest decision ‘will cause distress for some and have ramifications for the Anglican Communion as a whole, as well as for its ecumenical and interfaith relationships.’"

Archbishop Justin Welby

Feast of the Assumption: August 15

long before his eleventh birthday. Thereafter the family moved back to his birthplace. Then, three years later, he returned to the United States and within a short while he started working full time—"with no working papers," he adds—pushing a cart and delivering newly made clothes to different buildings in New Jersey across from the City. At one restaurant, he met his wife, Lucy, who hails from Mexico City. Lucy decided she wanted to move where her family was, the San Francisco Bay Area, so they married and moved here together. That was in 1983, and the couple has two girls and two boys ("I love ten kids," and five grandchildren. He moved to Santa Rosa a year later, which is when he started his janitorial business.

Then in 1988, he began serving Cardinal Newman when it was just one of the clients (another was St. Rose School).

Not long thereafter, Valentin says that then-Principal Tom Beecher approached him and said, "Avid, we have problems with the school, as you see. What do you think?" Valentin replied, "I can do miracles."

And miracles he did. Where mud, mangled wire fences, bent pipes, and a score of other eyesores once stood, Valentin and his crew placed sidewalks, fresh coats of paints, bushes, and flowers, especially roses. Lots and lots of roses, which Valentin loves.

Walk on campus today, and it is impossible to imagine what the place must have looked like before. It is so impeccably manicured one finds it hard to believe that what is now the neatly edged lunch table was once nothing but dirt and bushes. Before Valentin got there, boys from Newman would have to walk over to Ursuline High School's covered eating area to eat their lunch or sit under a big tree on the grass. There were no tables and no benches, and very few lockers. The paint scheme—if one could call it that—contained, amongst other shades, pink, not necessarily a hue one would imagine for a boys school whose official colors are yellow and red.

There were not even any sidewalks, and the classroom carpets were the original from 1964. Before he set to work, the parking lot was a dirt lot. He got it paved. Avid also created a water fountain, replaced all the carpets, and installed lighting.

He took out the old water fountains and replaced them with filtered ones, because he wants the kids to have drinking good water. Additionally, he had hand sanitizers installed in the hallways and the campus.

Perhaps the most egregious thing to his mind for a high school where religion was supposed to be a key focal point? There was absolutely no evidence that this high school where religion was supposed to be a key part of the curriculum, that then we can read heart rates and blood pressure. We can do things we could never have done before without the new technology and the new space.

Besides the estimated $2.1 million cost provided by the Ernest L. and Ruth W. Finley Foundation for construction, Held said the school needs another $150,000-200,000 to furnish the interior of the building.

This will therefore require additional fundraising, and while the school has acquired some gifts for this purpose, Held says, "Anyone from the community who wants to donate can make a gift in any amount."

Information on how to help can be found on the Newman website (www.cardinalnewman.org). Those who want to donate by mail can send their checks to the AMIHN Foundation or Cardinal Newman High School, 50 Ursuline Rd., Santa Rosa, CA 95403, and write "Science bldg. furnishing" on the memo line.

A formal building blessing and dedication with the entire school community will take place in 2016 when the building is completed.

What the Popes Have Said

Since popes began writing about social issues back in the 1800s, each one has said many things about socialism, all of them negative. The one who put it most succinctly, however, was Pope Pius XI (1922-29).

"We make this pronouncement: Whether considered as a doctrine or an historical fact or a movement—socialism—"it remains truly socialism"—even after it has yielded to truth and justice on the points which we have mentioned, cannot be reconciled with the teachings of the Catholic Church because its concept of society itself is utterly foreign to Christian truth. [Socialism] is based nevertheless on a theory of society which has yielded to truth and justice on the points which are most important to it, namely, labor and the state."

"Socialism is based on this theory of society which has yielded to truth and justice on the points which are most important to it, namely, labor and the state."

"And the teachers to push more for the Catholic religious practice it more. Now we're OK cause we got a couple of nuns. We got two priests as such we never had them before. Well, we had them before my time, but not until now. That's a big influence on Cardinal Newman, and I think they're going very well with that. The Catholicism is being practiced more than it was years ago. [I hope that continues]."

For now Valentine's retirement plans are simple. He will occasionally help his son with his business. He has bought a property near Chico and may spend more time up there. There might be a vacation and then there will be the challenges of finding ways to keep busy, a fairly common problem for new retirees.

Regardless of where Valentine's future takes him, his legacy at Cardinal Newman will be there to see for a very long time.

educational environment so our students are equipped to be the sort of people) who will change our world"

In an interview with North Coast Catholic, Held said the building is needed because, "The original buildings are 50 years old, and we have not had an opportunity to modernize. Second, there is a real desire to offer more science, technology, math opportunities, and we knew we could only do that with new courses if we had additional space. So this new building allows us to increase number of educational opportunities and classes for our students."

She said the addition will have all new state of the art equipment, including flat screen monitors and very fast broadband width.

"A lot of experimentation opportunities are now done online," Held noted, "so students can discover and correct and fix things by using programs that are offered through apps, in addition to still having a lot of hands on science."

"We'll have a much more robust arena of offerings, allowing kids to do things we would never have thought of."

She also said, "We are incorporating more robotics, so we'll have a space in our large physics room and actually a back patio area where we can build robots. And now you have microscopes that hook up with probes to a program that then we can read heart rates and blood pressure. We can do things we could never have done before without the new technology and the new space."

Psychological research has time and again shown that people (especially children) possess a great deal of natural resilience that they can fall back on when their social situations makes the above factors difficult to achieve. We are all called to help the broken family by being a witness to the loving God who ultimately brings healing and forgiveness to those suffering.

In the video, two members of the investigation team are seen presenting themselves as part of a "fetal tissue procurement company" and asking about how they could work with Planned Parenthood clinics to procure fetal tissue for research.

The video purports to show Nucatola explaining to the undercover investigators how Planned Parenthood provides organs from aborted babies for a "reasonable" fee.

The undercover video appears to show Nucatola discussing what constitutes a "reasonable" payment for the donation of fetal tissue.

Katie Short, Life Defense Foundation's vice president for research, says "the 'sting' unfolded over three years, because it takes time to build up a front as a biotech company and gain access to Planned Parenthood executives. The lunch, he said, is just the beginning: The Center for Medical Progress plans to release a new video every week for the next few months.

"David Daleiden rejects Nucatola's claim that costs associated with fetal tissue donation involve shipping and staff hours. "Laterally the only thing the clinic is doing is carrying the fetus from the operation to the tech," he said.

The next day the president of Planned Parenthood apologized for the "tone" of its chief medical officer, whose candid comments about fetal organ removal have generated heavy attacks against the organization.

"Our top priority is the passionate care that we provide. In our videos, one of our staff members speaks in a way that does not reflect that compassion," president Cecile Richards said.

Richards also doubles down on her defense of fetal tissue donation — which she said contributes to "life-saving research. She said the donations are only done with the woman's consent and never for profit.

"I want to be really clear. The allegation that Planned Parenthood profits in any way from tissue donation is not true," Richards adds.

Sen. Chuck Grassley (R-Iowa), chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, sent a letter on July 16 to Richards noting federal law prohibits the "alteration of abortion methods or procedures solely in order to obtain fetal tissue.

"Title IV of the Public Health Service Act says abortion providers cannot alter the "timing, method, or procedures" used to terminate a pregnancy solely for the purpose of obtaining fetal tissue but allows for the donation of tissue with "reasonable payments" for the "transportation, implantation, process, preservation, quality control, or storage of human fetal tissue." It explicitly prohibits the sale of tissue for "valuable consideration.”

The video also includes a discussion of possibly adjusting the abortion procedure of certain babies to better deliver an "intact specimen" to the organ harvesters.

"If our usual technique is suction, at 10-12 weeks, and we switch to using an IPAS or something with less suction, and increase the odds that it will come out as an intact specimen, then we're kind of violating the protocol that says to the patient, "We're not doing anything different in our care of you," Gatter appears to say.

"Now to me, that's kind of a specious little argument," she appears to continue, saying that she "wouldn't object" to asking the abortion doctor "to use an IPAS at that gestational age, in order to increase the odds that he's going to get an intact specimen, but I do need to throw it out there as a concern. Because the patient is signing something and we're signing something saying that we're not changing anything with the way we're managing you, just because we agree to give tissue.

"I think they're both totally appropriate techniques. There's no difference in pain involved. I don't think the patients would care one iota. So yeah, I'm not making a fuss about that."
Danbury, UK (The Libertarian Republic)—Having threat-ened to do so since 2013, a wealthy gay couple has decided to sue in order to force their church to solemnize their wedding.

The Drewitt-Barlows, a millionaire couple from the United Kingdom, stated, “We’ve launched a challenge to the government’s decision to allow some religious groups to opt out of performing same-sex couples.”

Both attend St. John the Baptist Church, an Anglican parish, and said it is based on the 2010 Equality Act which was voted into law by the [ruling] Coalition, “And the same laws, now enshrined in the 2010 Equality Act which was voted into law by the [ruling] Coalition, will, CoE lawyers believe, make churches offer weddings to same-sex couples if the law permits them to marry.”

According to the BBC in 2013, when the legislation passed Parliament, “Ministers … stated legislation allowing same-sex marriages in England and Wales would not compel any religious organisation to conduct such marriages.”

Millionaire Gay Couple Will Sue to Force Church Wedding

by Bishop-elect Robert Barron

In the earliest centuries of the Church’s life, thousands—including Peter, Paul, Agnes, Cecelia, Clement, Felic-ity, Perpetua, Sebastian, Lawrence, and Cyprian—were brutally put to death by officials of the Roman Empire.

In the fourth century, St. Ambrose (ca. 340-97) was opposed by Emperor Theodosius. In the eleventh century, Pope St. Gregory VII (ca. 1020-85) locked horns with the Holy Roman Emperor Henry IV. In the nineteenth cen-tury, German Chancellor Otto von Bismarck (1815-98) waged a Kulturkampf [literally, “culture struggle”] against the Catholic Church in Germany. And in the twentieth century, more martyrs gave their lives for the faith than in all the previous centuries combined.

Now why am I rehearsing this rather sad history? In the wake of the Supreme Court of the United States decision regarding same sex unions, a not inconsiderable number of Catholics feel beleaguered and more than a little afraid. Their fear comes from the manner in which the deci-sion was framed and justified. Since same-sex marriage is now recognized as a fundamental human right guar-ananteed by the Constitution, those who oppose it can only be characterized as bigots animated by an irrational prejudice.

To be sure, Justice Anthony Kennedy and his colleagues in the majority assure us that those who have religious objections to same-sex marriage will be respected, but one wonders how such respect is congruent with the logic of the decision. Would one respect the owners of a business who refuse to hire black people as a matter of principle? Would not the government, in point of fact, be compelled to do so against those owners? The proponents of gay marriage have rather brilliantly adopted the rhetoric of the civil rights movement, precisely so as to force this conclusion.

And this is why my mentor, the late Francis Cardinal SP. Roch (aka, Roque) of Montpellier, confessor have rather brilliantly adopted the rhetoric of the civil rights movement, precisely so as to force this conclusion.

It is a shame that we are forced to take Christians into a court to get them to recognize us. It uplifts me because I want it so much—a big lavish ceremony, the whole works. I just don’t think it is going to happen straight away. While same-sex marriage is now legal in the UK after a bill cleared Parliament earlier this year, the legislation still protects the right of churches to opt out of performing gay weddings, specifically the Church of England [CoE].

Drewitt-Barlow is pleased with the law, and said, “As much as people are saying this is a good thing, I am still not getting what I want.”

In 2012, when the change in marriage’s legal definition was first proposed by Prime Minister David Cameron, the Daily Mail reported, “An analysis of equality law by Church of England lawyers suggests assurances from David Cam-eron and his ministers that no church will be compelled to provide such ceremonies are worthless.

[Government] Ministers have repeatedly said since the plan for same-sex marriage was announced five months ago that it would apply in civil law only and that gay wed-ding ceremonies would not be imposed on churches.

But equality laws introduced by Labour in 2007 have already disrupted 11 Roman Catholic adoption agencies because they are no longer allowed to decline to place children with gay couples.

“The same laws, now enshrined in the 2010 Equality Act which was voted into law by the [ruling] Coalition, will, CoE lawyers believe, make churches offer weddings to same-sex couples if the law permits them to marry.”

According to the BBC in 2013, when the legislation passed Parliament, “Ministers … stated legislation allowing same-sex marriages in England and Wales would not compel any religious organisation to conduct such marriages.”

Similarly in Obergefell v. Hodges, the Supreme Court of the United States decision that legalized same sex unions, Justice Anthony Kennedy wrote on behalf of the majority, “Finally, it must be emphasized that religions, and those who adhere to religious doctrines, may continue to advocate with utmost, sincere conviction that, by divine precepts, same-sex marriage should not be condoned. The First Amendment ensures that religious organizations and persons are given proper protection as they seek to teach the principles that are so fulfilling and so central to their lives and faiths, and to their own deep aspirations to continue the family struc-ture they have long revered. The same is true of those who oppose same-sex marriage for other reasons.”

Nonetheless, many religious leaders have a growing con-cern that with no formal protection under the law, the US will eventually see cases such as the Drewitt-Barlows. After all, despite its “utmost, sincere conviction that, by divine precepts, same-sex [unions] should not be condoned,” and that all children deserve a mother and a father, the Archdiocese of Boston was forced out of the adoption business because it declined to place children with homosexual couples.

Of course, just because the Drewitt-Barlows have decid-ed to bring a lawsuit, does not mean a court will side with them. And even if a British court does side with the couple, that by no means requires our judges to follow English jurisprudence.

Nonetheless, it was just two years ago that government ministers in the UK were assuring religions that their teachings would be kept safe from government or judicial interference. If it happens there, there is no reason to stop it from happening here.

And this is why my mentor, the late Francis Cardinal SP. Roch (aka, Roque) of Montpellier, confessor have rather brilliantly adopted the rhetoric of the civil rights movement, precisely so as to force this conclusion.

Supreme Court Upholds Use of Controversial Execution Drug

Washington, DC (CNA/EWTN News)—The Supreme Court of the United States has ruled in favor of the con-tinued use of a drug that has been accused of causing excruciating pain in several controversial state executions.

The 5-4 ruling in Glossip v. Gross was announced June 29. The majority opinion said that “because some risk of pain is inherent in any method of execution, we have held that the Constitution does not require the avoidance of all risk of pain.”

The Court ruled opponents of the drug had “failed to establish that any risk of harm was substantial when com-pared to a known and available alternative method of execution.”

Lawyers for three Oklahoma death-row inmates had argued the state’s three-drug protocol for executions violat-ed constitutional bans on cruel and unusual punishment.

The execution protocol includes the sedative midazolam. The drug’s effectiveness was recently called into question when it was used in several unusually prolonged execu-tions in Ohio, Arizona, and Oklahoma in which inmates appeared to suffer significantly during their deaths.

Keeping the Love Flames Burning ... by God’s Design

by Annette Righetti

The marshmallow is on fire! For me, few things beat the thrill of a marshmallow light- ing up before my eyes and waiting until it’s heated just right. Similarly during engagement, everything seems to be great, and you and your fiancé are “on fire” for one another.

From the outside looking in, though, the Catholic Church seems to want to put out the fire with these restrictions on what we can and can’t do.

It doesn’t help that the media hits us with messages of unlimited possibilities such as contraception, cohabitation, and premarital sex to name a few.

That is what you get when you live in a secular society. Granted, nearly all societies are secular by their very nature. But some are more religious and others more godless.

I would suggest ours is mostly godless. Thus if you prac- tice the Church’s teachings, there will be tremendous ten- sion between the way you live and the way society says we should live, especially regarding marital sexuality.

So let’s ask this question: In a society where the polls say, “The Bible/Church is wrong in this regard,” why should we listen to the Bible/Church?

Well, first, as most would agree—and the Bible/Church teaches—God is the Creator. Because of how He created nature (including our bodies), by definition anything put between God and man will interrupt and frustrate His design and His purpose for that design.

For a couple, contraception does exactly that. It puts something in between a husband and wife and between a couple and God that He never intended to be there (cf. Gen 1:28).

Worse yet, it not only interrupts and frustrates our relation- ship with God, it does this with husband and wife. Their covenant is supposed to mirror the free, faithful, fruitful, and total self-giving love of the Trinity.

God made us in His image, and God is perfect. What He originally made—before original sin—was perfect. The way He made it was perfect. Why do we need to alter or try to change a perfect design?

Could it be because we do not love like God loves, that is, unconditionally and selflessly?

So what is God’s “perfect design” for husband and wife? God’s perfect design for fertility is that a woman ovulates one day a month, not thirty days. That’s scientific fact. When you understand which day of the month that is, then you understand your fertility.

When you understand this, the fear of getting pregnant is replaced with an openness to life and to God’s plan for the married couple.

The question changes from, “What is our will for our lives?” to “What is God’s will?”

During our marriage preparation, my husband and I began to chart our fertility for the first time. In charting, we saw how NFP tells a couple when they will most likely conceive.

Charting also shows when it is not possible to become pregnant. The method we learned for doing this is 99 per- cent effective because it cross checks the signs of fertility. That percent matches any artificial methods on the market.

Best of all, it is all “organic.” Nothing artificial. No chemi- cals in our bodies. Just working with God’s design.

There are “growing pains,” especially during the fertile time when our relationship is on fire and we are attracted toward each other. God did that on purpose! How do you keep that “fire” burning? We’ve stumbled but found other activities to do as a couple: being with our children, praying daily, exercising, and doing projects that use up that extra energy. Abstinence and chastity, oh yes, they are right there in the middle of it all.

Don’t worry or be anxious. Waiting for something good makes it so much better when that something good arrives.

Which Statue of Christ Frees a Prisoner Every Year?

Málaga, Spain—A statue of our Savior carrying a Cross, venerated with the invocation of Nuestro Padre Jesús El Rico, is carried in procession on the night of Holy Wednesday through the streets of Málaga, Spain. At the Bishop’s plaza, the cortège pauses and the porters place the heavy bier on the ground. There, a prisoner from the Penitentiary Center of Alhaurín provokes rebellion among the inmates; they seize the statue of Nazarene venerated in the neighbor- ing Monastery of San Luis El Real [St. Louis the King] in procession.

Fearing that the prisoners would flee, permission was denied. This provoked rebellion among the inmates; they seized the statue of Jesus El Rico and bore it triumphantly through the city streets. Afterwards, they returned the statue to the mon- astery and went back to prison. Not one of them used the occasion as a ruse to escape.

Touched by the generous action of these prisoners, King Charles III granted to the Sweet Jesus the privi- lege of liberating one prisoner every Holy Wednesday, in a custom that endures to this day.

Ashley Donohoe
Ashley Donohoe, 22, of Rohnert Park, a graduate of St. Eugene School, died in the early morning hours of June 16 when the Berkeley apartment balcony on which she and several others—including Olivia Burke, 21, her cousin from Ireland—collapsed and plummeted to the ground 50 feet below. Four others also died for a total of six killed—three women, three men—while seven others were seriously injured.

According to the Press Democrat, the “balcony is believed to have been compromised by rotted wooden beams.” Subsequent news reports revealed the balcony had passed inspection a short time before.

Donohoe was well-liked, and she and her cousin, who was here on a special summer work visa, were best friends, “like twins,” it was said. Ashley had travelled to Ireland at least 20 times to visit Burke. “They died together,” said Ashley’s father George. “At the end, they were side by side.”

Donohoe attended Sonoma State University studying biology and was visiting Burke’s apartment, where the cousin was celebrating one of her roommate’s twenty-first birthday. All the residents were from Ireland. Indeed all of the dead but Donohoe were Irish-born.

Well-known for her soccer playing abilities, Donohoe’s friend Ashley Smith also remembered, “She was super outgoing. Every time she met somebody, she wanted to be friends and bring them into the group.”

Wanting to pursue a career in forensics, she held an internship with the Sonoma County Coroner’s Office. Said Abigail Zoger, a former professor who knew about her intern work, “Ashley, in her picture, looks so sweet, so all-American, and she was. But she also loved dissection. She loved working on cadavers, working on anatomy.”

Perhaps the most profound way people remember Donohoe, however, is as a friend. She kept a boy company by baking chocolate chip cookies with him after he had his wisdom teeth pulled. There was also cancer patient Michael Jensen, who she regularly visited, including the Sunday prior to her death.

One unidentified woman observed, “She was my friend when I didn’t have many friends, and that meant a lot.”

Msgr. Daniel Whelton celebrated a joint memorial Mass for the two cousins before a packed congregation at St. Joseph Church in Cotati on June 20. The Irish Consulate hired four buses to transport any students from Berkeley who wanted to attend the obsequies.

In his homily Monsignor discussed the mystery of these beautiful young women’s tragic deaths.

“Naturally we ask, ‘Why did it happen? … With some there is a tendency to say, ‘It is the will of God.’ But you know God did not want this tragedy to happen. So what can we do as Catholics, as Christians? We can only look to the scriptures…. ”

He then recounted how Isaiah tells us that God can no more forget us than a mother can her child. He told the girls’ relatives they will never forget them, “But never forget that even though you will suffer through the pain in their loss and you question and doubt, never forget as Isaiah told us, God has Olivia and Ashley inscribed on the palm of His hands.”

Monsignor also noted that Our Lord wants us to have faith in Him.

“My prayer today … is that you will nurture and deepen your faith in the Lord because it gives us a hope that death is not an end but is rather the beginning of an everlasting life with God. That is why Jesus said, ‘I go to prepare a place for you and will come back and take you to that place.’”

Following the funeral and interment of Ashley, the Donohoes accompanied Olivia’s remains and the Burke family back to Ireland for a memorial service and her committal.

Eternal rest grant unto Ashley and Olivia, O Lord, and let perpetual light shine upon them. May their souls and all the souls of the faithful departed, through the mercy of God, rest in peace. Amen. ❖

Marian Sisters Receive Two Novices

by NCC staff

Santa Rosa—On June 12, 2015, the Feast of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, the Marian Sisters of Santa Rosa (MSSR) joyfully received two new novices.

Miss Teresa McGuire will now be known in religious life as Sr. Maria Serra of Our Lady of Guadalupe. Sr. Maria Serra is a native of Southern California and was baptized and raised in Bl. Junipero Serra Church in Lancaster, where she later served in youth ministry.

Miss Marissa Zieminski will be known as Sr. Margaret Mary of Our Lady of the Sacred Heart. She grew up in Santa Rosa. She and her family consider it a privilege to have served in music and youth ministries in several parishes of this diocese.

Both of the new novices will join senior novices Sr. Mary Vianney and Sr. Caritas Marie in a canonical year of deeper prayer, service, and study as they prepare for profession of the vows of poverty, chastity, and obedience.

The MSSRs are a contemplative/active community of religious Sisters devoted to Jesus through Mary with at mission to communicate the beauty, goodness, and truth of the Catholic faith through works of joyful evangelization while living the fullness of the liturgical life.

They currently serve in various capacities including at St. Eugene School and Cathedral, Cardinal Newman High School, and in the Department of Catholic Schools.

To learn more about the Marian Sisters, visit their website, http://www.mariansisters.com. ❖

Former Oakland A’s Captain Shares What Matters Most

Cincinnati (National Catholic Register)—Playing in the Major League Baseball All-Star Game is a dream of many young baseball players, and third baseman Sal Bando was able to live this dream four times. He made his All-Star Game debut in 1969, which was followed by three consecutive appearances from 1972-74, all with the Oakland Athletics. It was during this three-year stretch that Bando captained three World Series championship teams as well.

While everything was going smoothly on the field, Bando grew distant from the Catholic faith of his youth. It wouldn’t be until he started experiencing baseball troubles that he was reminded of how important Christ and His Church are. By this time, the Cleveland native’s best playing years were behind him, but he had regained a Catholic perspective on life before retiring in 1981 with the Milwaukee Brewers.

Bando was the general manager of the Brewers 1991-1999, and in 2006, he helped to launch Catholic Athletes for Christ, a group he continues to serve today as an Athlete Advisory Board member.

Bando spoke with Register correspondent Trent Beat-tie in anticipation of this year’s “Midsummer Classic,” which took place July 14 at Great American Ballpark in Cincinnati.

St. Apollinaris Hosts Vacation Bible School

Napa—From June 22-26, over 100 children and 80 volunteers invaded the grounds of St. Apollinaris Church in Napa for its Vacation Bible School, with the event by all accounts a huge success. Participants climbed Mt Everest together, learning the lesson that even though we face obstacles and “mountains” all the time, with God’s ever presence we can do anything.

Enthusiastic volunteers, dressed in mountain attire or mountain-lake blue shirts, led each morning of the school. Children sang and danced to songs at the beginning of each morning and then were led to their various programs by their crew leaders.

Each day featured four stations: videos, where they heard about biblical stories of people who faced various dilemmas but still overcame them; crafts that were related to God’s inspiration and love; and games that taught them how to work together to face life’s “mountains.”

Catholic Comedian Jim Gaffigan Gets Own TV Show

New York City (CNA)—God and comedy clubs are not generally something most families throw together. Then again, most families don’t create a cable comedy show either.

But for Jim and Jeannie Gaffigan, this mix of faith and funny is a vital part of their family life—a life that they have drawn upon in creating their latest project, a TV sitcom.

“Mixing these worlds—the world of standup comedy and one’s faith—can provide conflict and humor,” said Jim Gaffigan, who co-wrote and stars in The Jim Gaffigan Show.

His wife Jeannie, the other comedic mastermind behind the show’s script and the new program’s executive producer, hoped their family experience mixing spheres of personal, religious, and public life would appeal to other families navigating a sometimes strange world.

“It’s normal families that are in this very abnormal situation and all the things that inform their interactions with other people. And there’s a lot of comedy in that,” she said.

“People relate to it. People laugh at it.”

The new show premiered on TV Land July 15, and episodes are available online at www.jimgaffigan.com. Many of the plots in the new series come from the couple’s personal experience of living as a Catholic family in Lower Manhattan, a neighborhood where spotting hipsters and bohemians is much more likely than sying a family with five kids.

Funny has been a part of this family’s dynamic for years. The couple met in 2000 while working together, getting married in 2003. While raising their family, the couple wrote and created comedy shows such as “Beyond the Pale” (2006) and the Grammy-nominated “Mr. Universe” (2012), which Jeannie produced and Jim performed. The duo also worked together to write Jim’s 2012 comedic memoir Dad is Fat, and a second collection of essays, Food: a Love Story, published in 2014.

In the new show, Jim said they wanted to present “this conventional family in this unconventional world, and that’s really what it is for every family in America.”

“We made a decision not to hide any of the spectrums of our life. There’s the Church and there’s the comedy club and they’re sort of diametrically opposed,” Jeannie explained, saying she and her husband sought to show the reality of both parts of their lives without disparaging either as well as the reality of living in New York City, she said, a place of “all sorts of people, all sorts of faiths, all sorts of lifestyles, all sorts of attitudes.”

Given that, Jim said, “The good thing is that these topics, or even these angles into comedy, are fresh.”

This honest look at faith and doubt, along with its light-hearted approach, Jeannie said, allows the show to deal with its characters’ faith in a way that’s neither too sweet nor too dour.

Jim pointed to an example of dialogue between the Jim and Jeannie characters where the Faith informs the comedy in this frank way.

“When Jeannie’s mad, she might say, ‘I don’t want to raise five kids by myself’,” he explained. “And Jim would say, ‘You’re going to divorce me?’”

“No! I’m Catholic,” Jeannie’s character jokes. “I don’t believe in divorce. I would murder you.”

Even if the characters joke about these normal tensions between spouses, ultimately creating the show was a family affair—one that both Jim and Jeannie participate in, open their family life to, and hope fans find fresh and engaging.

Philip Bruce “Bunk” Higgins
Born on December 26, 1935, Mr. Higgins died June 5 of heart failure. He was 79. It is said that he learned by his grandmother’s example of discreetly helping those in need. A faithful Catholic, he attended Immaculate Conception High School near Chicago and then St. Mary College in Winona, Minnesota, graduating in 1957. He moved with his family to Rohnert Park in 1979, and became a parishioner at St. Elizabeth Ann Seton Church, where he volunteered with the St. Vincent de Paul Society. He is described as having been loyal, occasionally mischievous, astute, fair, and “sought each individual’s uniqueness and grace.” A memorial service is set for August 8 at 1:30pm at his parish.

Thomas Robert “Toot” Corriveau
Mr. Corriveau died unexpectedly on June 19. A faithful husband of 33 years to his beloved wife Nancy, a good father to his cherished children, son Ryan and daughter Denise, and a valued employee at Blentech Corporation for 29 years, Mr. Corriveau’s memory may be carried the longest by those he coached in basketball through St. Rose Church’s CYO over the years. He was well respected in the coaching community. His memorial Mass took place July 10 at St. Rose. Those wishing to donate in his memory may contribute to the scholarship fund set up for Denise through Exchange Bank or to the “Grateful for our Past, Building our Future” campaign to retrofit the original St. Rose Church.

Colleen Edith “Bird” (née Granero) Ramirez
Mrs. Ramirez died suddenly on June 22 just a few weeks before her fifty-fourth birthday. Born on July 2, 1961, in San Francisco, she moved to Sonoma in the early 1990s and worked as a property manager for vacation rentals. Then she became a real estate agent, and she earned an outstanding reputation. A memorial Mass took place on July 1 at St. Francis of Solano Church in Sonoma.

Catholic Cemeteries

What is the Crypt of Peace?

With the growth of cremation and in light of the Church’s teachings regarding the proper disposition of cremated remains, it is our mission as a ministry to offer a dignified and sacred resting place for all.

Catholic Cemeteries offers at no charge, to anyone, who has cremated remains at home or is considering scattering, a dignified committal of the cremated remains at Calvary Catholic Cemetery in Santa Rosa. The committal will occur at the Crypt of Peace with the remains permanently interred within the consecrated grounds of our Catholic Cemetery.

Complimentary placement and recordation does not include memorialization. However, in celebration of life and sharing our legacy of faith, you are provided with a link to submit photos, videos and stories through our Web Cemeteries page. Loved ones can leave information for future generations to view and learn about their family members who have passed. Please contact us for more information at (707) 546-6290.

There will be a “lot” at this sale On August 22, from 9am-2pm, St. Anthony of Padua Church in Willits will hold its annual parking lot sale. Although neither of its parking lots are for sale, nor is it held in the parking lot (it’s in the parish hall), the largest sale of second-hand household goods in Willits offers the opportunity to pick up some great treasures in furniture, small appliances, kitchen wares, linens and blankets, toys and games, books, and tons of “guy stuff”

Organized by the Ladies’ Guild, proceeds fund scholarships for parish high school graduates, give support to local charities, and provide for maintenance needs of the church building.

St. Bernard Reports

St. Bernard Church in Eureka’s Knights of Columbus’ junior auxiliary group, the Columbian Squires held a car wash in the church parking lot on Saturday, July 18 to fundraise for their various charitable works.

Also, July 24-26, the parking lot was seal coated and re-striped.

Finally, on the last weekend of the month, the parish welcomed Fr. Noel S. Octaviano, MJ of the Missionaries of Jesus, who made an appeal for prayers and financial support.

He was a missionary in Brazil for 10 years. Since 2000, he has worked in the Philippines, currently at San Isidro High School, and he is active in the local Christian-Muslim Dialogue Ministry in the Territorial Prelature of Marawi on the island of Mindanao in the Philippines.

More than 65 percent of the Missionaries’ annual budget to support its worldwide efforts comes from the Mission Appeal. Please make checks out to St. Bernard Church, and the parish office will send them to the Missionaries: 615 H St., Eureka, CA 95502

St. Mary’s Makes Moves

When Fr. Michael Cloney, pastor of Christ the King Church in McKinleyville, recently retired, Bishop Robert F. Vasa named Fr. Balaswamy Govindu, pastor of St. Mary Church in Arcata, pastor of Christ the King, Holy Trinity Mission in Trinidad, and St. Kateri Tekakwitha Mission in Hoopa, and chaplain for the Humboldt State University Newman Center. With so many additional duties, Father has understandably needed to make some changes.

Starting last month, there will no longer be a Mass on Monday mornings at St. Mary. The other weekday and weekend Masses remain unchanged.

Fr. Cloney will stay in the McKinleyville rectory this summer and attend to McKinleyville and Trinidad. He will also be available on an as needed basis in the future.

Father also appointed Christ the King bookkeeper Cindy Meadows to the same position at St. Mary.

Finally, St. Mary has initiated an Hour of Prayer. It met for the first time on Thursday, July 9, at 7pm in the church.

Calling anyone with “a fine way to play a Steinway” Our Lady of Guadalupe Church in Windsor is starting a youth Mass and needs a keyboard player. For information on schedule and stipends please contact: Frances Rozowski at 707-837-8962.

Also the parish has the following volunteer opportunities: Communion for the homebound; giving people rides to Mass; ushers for the English Masses; and gift store volunteers for two-to-three hours Tuesdays and Wednesdays.

Love is in the air in Rohnert Park

On Sunday, July 26, St. Elizabeth Seton Church in Rohnert Park acknowledged couples with anniversaries in July with a special Mass. Recognized were Jim and Bernadine Couglin (54 years); Larry and Marilyn Hanson (49 years); Ken and Joanne Bencic (47 years); Bob and Jane Ginn (41 years); Brian and Anne Thomas (32 years); Philip and Carol Barraza (31 years); and Stephen Hall and Linda Sims (11 years). Thanks to all these great couples. As Pope Francis says, “Marriage isn't easy, but it’s beautiful.”

St. Helena Catholic Church School

St. Helena Catholic Church School in St. Helena, “We are grateful to all who worked so hard on the upgrades to the school building last summer. The stucco, bathroom upgrades, painting, and more done in the heat of July and first week in August were monumental. The beautiful results served as a foundation for new landscaping. And 80 percent of the work was done by volunteers—including over 40 men commuting from the Central Valley.” For the remarkable generous gift from many, the work and improvement to the St. Helena School was honored with an award in the Beautification Foundation’s non-residential category.

But wait, don’t get out that checkbook yet … St. John the Baptist School in Healdsburg announces its “transitional Kindergarten” program, which begins this month. Children must be four years old by September 2. Introductory tuition is $3,000 for the first year. Also transfer assistance grants are available to first through eighth grade students who transfer to SJB: 30 percent off for the first year, 15 percent for the second.

An “Epic” adventure begins at St. Eugene’s What do the Inquisition, the Crusades, Bloody Mary, and the Galileo affair all have in common? According to a DVD series that started last month at St. Eugene Cathedral, what you learned about them in school has only given you one side of the story, and it’s not the Catholic one.

To give that perspective, the parish’s Knights of Columbus Council 4930 will host Epic: A Journey Through Church History.

First homosexual divorce firm opened Philadelphia (CBS)—A Philadelphia lawyer has launched a new division entirely devoted to LGBT divorce.

Attorney J. Conor Corcoran named the website for the division AdamsSteve.com. He says it is “in response to the homophbic taunts of the past when [people] would chant that God intended ‘Adam and Eve, not Adam and Steve.’”

The law office of J. Conor Corcoran says it is “proud to be the first law firm in the US to practice in the field of gay divorce, providing Private Client Domestic Services, 24/7 and coast to coast, regardless of your sexual orientation.”

Defense department to lift transgender ban Washington, DC—Saying the Department of Defense’s ban on transgender persons is outdated, Secretary of Defense Ash Carter has ordered a six-month study for the purpose of ending this barrier to military service.

While the study group “will review [current] policies and determine if lifting the ban” would adversely impact battle readiness, “it will begin with the presumption that transgender people should ‘openly serve’ except where objective, practical impediments are identified.”

Oregon OKs teen sex changes without parental consent Salem, Oregon (Fox News)—The list of things 15-year-olds cannot legally do in Oregon is substantial: drive, smoke, immigration, student debt, and free speech. Gabriella graduated from George Washington University this May with a BA in political science and a minor in journalism.
Donate blood, get a tattoo—even go to a tanning bed. But under a first-in-the-nation policy quietly enacted in January about which many parents are only now learning, 15-year-olds may now get a sex-change operation. This does not require parental notification, and the state will even pay for it through its Medicaid program, the Oregon Health Plan.

“It is trespassing on the hearts, the minds, the bodies of our children,” said Lori Porter of Parents’ Rights in Education. “They’re our children. And for … a life-altering decision like that to be done unbe- knownst to a parent or guardian, it’s mindboggling.”

In a statement, Oregon Health Authority spokeswoman Susan Wickstrom explained, “Age of medical consent varies by state. Oregon law—which applies to both Medicaid and non-Medicaid Oregonians—states that the age of medical consent is 15.”

While 15 is Oregon’s medical age of consent, the decision to cover sex-change operations was made by the Health Evidence Review Commission.

CDC report: Teen use of morning-after pill climbing

New York (Associated Press)—The Centers for Disease Control reports more than one in five sexually active teen girls have used the morning-after pill—a dramatic increase that likely reflects the greater ease teens have to buy the emergency contraceptive. A decade ago, usage was one in twelve.

That, however, was when a teen needed a prescription, which usually required parental consent. Now all teens can buy it without a prescription.

Usage of other forms of birth control have not changed much. Almost all sexually active teens have used a condom and half have used the Pill.

The CDC also reported that teen sexual activity is still at 45 percent for both boys and girls, unchanged from a decade ago, but down from the 1980s, when it was 60 percent for boys and 51 percent for girls.

Well-known priest spit on at Pride parade

New York City (Yahoo)—Fr. Jonathan Morris wasn’t feeling prudish after being spit on by two men near a Gay Pride Parade in New York City on June 28.

“Walking down Broadway and 22nd St. just now, I ran into gay marriage parade. Two men walked by and spat on me. Oh well… I deserve worse,” Morris tweeted.

Morris, a frequent guest on Fox News Channel, added the two men don’t represent all the marchers.

“The two men who spit on me are probably very good men caught up in excitement and past resentment. Most in that parade would not do that,” he added.

Oldest Qur’an found

London (Times of India)—The world’s oldest Qur’an has been found at the University of Birmingham.

Radiocarbon analysis conducted by scientists at the University of Oxford have said with 95 percent accuracy that the manuscript with the British university dates between 568-645 AD, meaning it belonged very close to the time of St. Augustine of Hippo, Church Doctor. He likely lived between 570-632.

Poland, where the population is 90 percent Catholic, only allows abortion within 12 weeks of pregnancy in cases of rape or incest, or 24 weeks in cases of irreversible fetal malformation or a threat to the mother’s life.

After 24 weeks of pregnancy, the procedure is allowed on a case-by-case basis if the mother’s life is at risk.

South African parliament lowers age of consent

 Pretoria—South Africa’s National Assembly has passed the Sexual Offences Amendment Act. The bill allows children ages 12-15 years to consent to sex with each other. It also allows a child aged 16 or 17 years to have consensual sex with a child of between 12 and 15 years if age difference is two years or less. Before the enactment of the law, a 15-year-old boyfriend and a 13-year-old girlfriend could both be prosecuted for statutory rape.

Christina Ndomo of Resources Aimed at the Prevention of Child Abuse and Neglect said the legislation “is a step in the right direction. Parents and caregivers must build closer relationships with their adolescents in order to influence their life choices.” She also said it gives the government an opportunity at better sex education and children better access to “non-judgmental adults.”

The African Christian Democratic Party releases a statement saying it “considers the passing of this Act as a gross violation of the moral fiber of society and an insult to the rights of children in our nation. This Act is a paradox because it spits in the face of the Child Protection Act which states that ‘exposing or subjecting a child to behavior that may harm the child psychologically or emotionally’ is criminal. Yet the government has placed children in harm’s way considering that 12-year-olds are not mature enough to make sexual decisions or understand the consequences thereof. Moreover government is exposing children to the risks of HIV/AIDS and other STDs, prostitutions, statutory rape, abortion, and child pornography.”

Freedom for Catholic education in England uncertain

Portsmouth, England (CNA/EWTN News)—Catholic schools in England could face problems under both a new “British values” government mandate and demands to approve same-sex relationships. But in the Diocese of Portsmouth, new education guidelines focus on Catholic fidelity, love of neighbor, and the love of Jesus Christ.

Portsmouth Bishop Philip Egan has written a letter introducing the diocese’s guidance on sex and relationship education (SRE). He said the document aims to “articulate the Christian vision of human happiness in a life lived in fidelity to Christ with love and responsibility.”

He said everyone faces challenges in living up to Christian ideals. Those who fall short of these ideals or view them differently should be shown “genuine pastoral sensitivity.” At the same time, Catholics must also recognize that God gives the grace and help to “grow in human maturity and to aspire in practice to what Christians profess.”

Bishop Egan’s letter did not mention specific regulations. However, the British Department for Education has required schools to teach “fundamental British values.” This requirement includes “challenging opinions or behaviors in school.” According to the British newspaper The Guardian, these rules are likely to conflict with Catholic, Jewish, Muslim, and other religious schools because they require them to prioritize secular law over religious teachings.

Conservative Member of Parliament Sir Edward Leigh, president of the Catholic Union of Great Britain, said in March that the requirement is “damaging Christian schools.” He charged that the British education standards office “appears to be guilty of trying to enforce a kind of state-imposed orthodoxy on certain matters of religious questions.”

Others leaders, such as Labour Party leadership front-runner Andy Burnham, have said religious schools must teach about same-sex relationships. In an interview with the LGBT newspaper Pink News, he rejected Catholic schools’ claims that it would violate their religious freedom to force them to teach about same-sex couples in schools.

Burnham said the Catholic schools are “strawford reset by someone.” He called for more action to counter “homo-phobic bullying,” including teaching all relationships are on par with “absolute quantity.”

For the Diocese of Portsmouth, SRE is “an education in love and responsibility.” This means that the moral dimension must always be incorporated and conscientious forms so students can recognize the value of their peers.

The guidance said that all Catholic school staff “daily deal with students who require them to prioritize secular law over religious teachings. This is especially important” concerning personal relationships and sexual morality.

Classes should refer to God’s Word as revealed through the Bible and Church teaching, with an emphasis on teaching the love of Jesus Christ.

Alternative views about non-marital sexual relations, contraception, homosexual acts, and artificial reproduction “should not be presented as neutral or value-free information, but always in relation to Church teaching on marriage and loving relationships.”

The guidance said students should be encouraged to grow to realize the Christian life. For this, it is essential for students to have “constant prayer, frequent confession, receive[1] the Holy Eucharist, along with the cultivation of self-discipline and virtuous habits.”

Bishop Egan wrote that his diocese “must not offend against modesty or privacy.”

“Purity and the virtue of chastity must be promoted. We must help students recognize that the proper place for sexual relationships is within the loving and permanent relationship of marriage,” the diocese said.

Anglican Bishop: US State Department didn’t let Assyrian Christians immigrate

(Washington, DC)—The United States Department of State may have sent a signal to an Anglican bishop in Iraq that despite persecution and harassment from the terror group known as ISIS, Christians in that country will not find any support from the United States government.

According to Faith J.H. McDonnell of Philos Project, the Right Rev. Julian M. Dobbs, bishop of the Diocese of CANA East (Convocation of Anglicans in North America), revealed that part of US foreign policy during an interaction with the State Department’s Bureau of Population, Refugees and Migration (PRM). Dobbs made his case to the State Department on behalf of a group of Assyrian Christians who are desperate to leave northern Iraq.

“There is no way that Christians will be supported because...”

McDonnell elaborated on the plight of Christians and other minorities in the region since ISIS took over the Iraqi city of Mosul in June 2014.
“Christians, Yazidis, Mandeens, and others were targeted for destruction, and within just the first week of ISIS’ occupation, more than 500,000 people fled the city,” McDonnell wrote. “The homes of Christians were marked with the Arabic letter ‘nun’, standing for Nazarene. [Editor’s note: The way ISIS uses this term is very much like a white racist calling black persons the “n” word.] Christians were threatened that they did not convert to Islam, pay jizya [an extortion tax], and live as a subjected people—‘dhimmi’—or flee immediately.”

According to McDonnell, Christians have even been threatened by some Muslims in the refugee camps run by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, or UNHCR. However, the State Department has refused to restitute affected Assyrian Christians in the United States. “Donors in the private sector have offered complete funding for the arbees and the resettlement in the United States of these Iraqi Christians that are sleeping in public buildings, on school floors, or worse,” McDonnell wrote. “But the State Department—while admitting 4,425 Somaliis to the United States in just the first six months of 2015, and possibly even accepting members of ISIS through the Syrian and Iraqi refugee program, all paid for by tax dollars—told Dobbs that they ‘would not support a special category to bring Assyrian Christians into the United States.’”

Such treatment by the State Department has even extended to Christian leaders in Iraq. According to a report on Fox News, the agency recently reversed a decision that denied a visa for an Iraqi Catholic nun who wanted to study theology. The nun was a victim of the persecution directed by ISIS against Christians.

“St. Diana Momika is a leading representative of the Nineveh Christians who have been killed and chased from their homes in and around Mosul by ISIS,” Fox News wrote. “Momika, who has been likened to Mother Teresa for her work with the poor and persecuted, was turned down, she said, because she was ‘internally displaced’ in Iraq, and deemed a risk to stay in the US, where she once lived and studied for six years.”

Australian bishops put on the defensive Hobart, Tasmania (CNA/EWTN News)—In a recent pastoral letter on marriage, Australia’s Catholic bishops reaffirmed Catholic teaching. And one bishop has countered a leading same-sex marriage activist who said the pastoral letter should be reported to the Tasmanian government for an illegal bias.

“The Catholic Church in Tasmania is exercising its right to freedom of opinion, just as opponents to the Church’s views on marriage are also exercising their rights,” Archbishop Julian Porteous of Hobart said, according to the Catholic Leader newspaper.

His comments concern Don’t Mess with Marriage, a pastoral letter the Australian bishops’ conference released May 28. He said the booklet “explains the meaning of marriage enshrined in our laws from a religious perspective.”

Australian political leaders are considering whether to define marriage in law to recognize same-sex unions as civil marriages.

“A document defending the current law in our nation could hardly be called discrimination,” Archbishop Porteous said. “We are being asked to abandon the plan of God for marriage and family (and) this would be a disastrous step to take.”

The pastoral letter was sent home with students of Catholic high schools in several archdioceses, including Hobart. It stressed both respect for all and respect for the unique nature of marriage as a union of man and a woman.

Randy Croome, national director of Australian Marriage Equality, claimed the booklet is illegal under Tasmanian law. His group cited statutes that bar offensive language. The group has published notices that promote or express discrimination.

“The booklet likely breaches the Anti-Discrimination Act, and I urge everyone who finds it offensive and inappropriate, including teachers, parents and students, to complain to the Anti-Discrimination Commissioner,” Croome said June 24.

A formal complaint against the archbishop has been filed with the commissioner, according to the newspaper The Australian.

Lyle Shelton, a spokesman for the non-denominational group The Christian Lobby, asked, “Where have we come to as a society when the political activists for redefining marriage want to use the law to stop children in religious schools from being taught that religion’s teaching? If a family sends their child to a Catholic school they should not be surprised if their children are taught the faith and morals of the school’s religious identity.

“Catholic Marriage Equality has attracted powerful allies in its push to redefine marriage. These include major businesses such as Google, which also funded the pro-same sex unions side in Ireland’s recent referendum. Polls indicate a majority of Australians at present support redefining marriage.”

Anthony Cleary, a religious education and evangelization official in the Sydney archdiocese, said positive comments about the pastoral letter outnumbered negative complaints “about two or three to one.” He noted that other information often goes home with students.

“The Church has to win the battle for the public mind.”

Vatican Expert: Holy Family wouldn’t flee to Egypt today Cairo/Rome (Crux)—John L. Allen, Jr., CNN’s Vatican commentator and former Vaticanista for National Catholic Reporter recently wrote the following:

“At the very origins of Christianity lies the story of the Holy Family’s flight into Egypt, escaping persecution under an Israelite king. In the crypt of a small Cairo church, one can still find the well from which tradition holds that Joseph obtained fresh water during Jesus’ exile.

“Sadly, Egypt today has become a place a small number of Christians are running away from, not toward, while much express a grim determination to hold on no matter how bad it gets.

“Along with my Crux colleague Inés San Martín, I spent a week in Egypt collecting the stories of these persecuted Christians.

“For instance, we met Wadie Ramos, a 64-year-old Christian doctor who was kidnapped in Egypt’s Sinai region last year and held for 92 days, blindfolded, and handcuffed until his family paid a ransom. Periodically he would be put in a car and driven around listening to verses from the Quran, while his captors beat him with a rubber hose for refusing to accept Islam.

“We met Andraous Owaida, a 44-year-old construction worker and father of two who was wounded and almost crushed to death when the Egyptian army plowed their armored personnel carriers into a crowd of Christian protesters four years ago, leaving 22 people dead, including several of Owaida’s friends.

Belgian doctors give depressed 24-year-old right to assisted suicide Brussels (Independent, UK)—Doctors in Belgium have granted a medically depressed woman the right to end her own life.

“The 24-year-old woman, named only as ‘Laura’, told doctors she had suffered from depression since she was a child and wished to end her life, local newspaper De Morgen reported.

“The date of Laura’s death is yet to be decided, but she may become part of a small increase in younger individuals seeking to end their lives.

“Belgium legalized euthanasia in 2002, with approximately 1,400 cases every year since then. In 2013, the same year that the number of requests to die spiked at over 1,800, the Belgian parliament passed an amendment extending the law to terminally ill children.”

Pope consolidates all Vatican communications Vatican City (CNA/EWTN News)—The Vatican’s nine communications offices will soon be consolidated under the authority of the newly-established Secretariat for Communications, per a June 27 directive of Pope Francis.

The Roman Pontiff instituted the new secretariat effective June 29. The new dicastery will oversee all of the Vatican’s communications offices, including Vatican Radio, L’Osservatore Romano, the Vatican Television Center, the Holy See Press Office, the Pontifical Council for Social Communications, Vatican Internet Service, the Vatican Typography, the Photograph Service, and the Vatican publishing house.

Pope asks Waldensians forgiveness Turin (CNA/EWTN News)—On June 22, Pope Francis met with members of the Waldensian movement, an ecclesial community which suffered persecution from Catholic authorities from the twelfth through seventeenth centuries. He apologized for the Church’s non-Christian attitudes and behavior” towards them during that period.

“Reflecting on the history of our relations, we can only grieve in the face of strife and violence committed in the name of faith, and ask the Lord to give us the grace to recognize we are all sinners, and to know how to forgive one another,” the Pope said June 22 at a Waldensian temple in Turin.

“I ask forgiveness for the non-Christian—even inhuman—attitudes and behaviors which, through history, we have had against you. In Jesus Christ’s name, forgive us!”

Monday’s encounter marks the first meeting between a pope and the Waldensian community. Founded in Lyon, France, in the late twelfth century, it is currently centered in Piedmont region of Italy, which Pope Francis visited June 21-22.

The movement was founded by Peter Waldo, and it embraced evangelical poverty and lay preaching. It teaches there are only two sacraments, baptism and the Eucharist. The Third Lateran Council condemned the movement’s ideas as early as 1179. Beginning in the early 1200s, many Waldensians were executed on account of heresy.

One of the largest killings took place in 1545, during which soldiers killed scores of Waldensians in the French city of Mirandol, although the extent of casualties is disputed by historians.

Pope Francis told the community, “On behalf of the Catholic Church, I ask for your forgiveness.”

Then Fr. John J. Brenkle and Fr. Louis Persano, spoke at the Portland Liturgical Week. The Week was an annual meeting that drew many thousands of Catholic laity, priests, and religious, not to mention many Protestant observers. Msgr. Brenkle, who was past superintendent of Schools for the diocese, spoke on schools and their role in the light of the post-Second Vatican Council liturgical reform. Fr. Persano spoke on music in the same context.

Bishop Leo T. Maher attended the fifteenth wedding celebration for Mr. and Mrs. Ora and Elizabeth (née Mertens) Moneymaker. He presented them with a scroll designed by Mother Mary Andrew Urban, OSU, on behalf of the Catholic Committee for the Aging. Mrs. Moneymaker had been named Santa Rosa Mother of the Year in 1953 and was a daily communicant at St. Rose Church. She also visited the sick. She hailed from St. Louis, and he from Knoxville, Tennessee. They met in Unisontown, Washington, moved to Forestville in 1937 to become dairy farmers, and then relocated in 1951 to Santa Rosa, where Mr. Moneymaker started a trucking business. By August 1965, their union had produced thirteen children, thirty-eight grandchildren, and five great grandchildren. Mr. Moneymaker died in 1975 at age 81. His wife passed in 1980 at age 87.

From 1983, St. Rose School students had been split up amongst three different locations. The new school year saw the opening of the new school located at 4300 Old Redwood Hwy. The cost was $1.1 million ($2.4 million today), aided in large part by parents and parishioners who raised $500,000 ($1.1 million today).

Ursuline High School student Magdalena Konieczny competed for the Sonoma County Junior Miss title. Then a senior at Ursuline, she won the poise and appearance category.

The 1985-86 school year saw the diocese welcome three new principals: Donna Passalacqua at St. John the Baptist School in Healdsburg; Br. Martin Fallin, FSC, at Justin-Siena High School in Napa; and Sr. Olive Murphy, RSM, at St. Apollinaris School in Napa.

Reflecting on five years in office, Bishop Daniel E. Walsh told NCC: “What has really inspired me is that priests, deacons, religious, and laity have stepped forward to take ownership of their Church. The problems we’ve met together have not been viewed as the bishop’s problems but our family’s problems. As a family, we have learned to cooperate with one another to resolve our difficulties and to grow in our faith.”

The new school year saw the welcoming of several new seminarians, two of whom—Fr. Sean Rogers, now pastor in Healdsburg; and Fr. Mario Valencia, now pastor in Cloverdale—went on to receive holy orders.

NCC featured a small article on St. Mary Marius Mei, BVM, and her seventy-fifth—anniversary as a religious. A native of San Francisco, Sister taught at Sr. Vincent de Paul School from 1943-46 and 1951-54, as well as at other BVM schools around the country. She retired to the Sisters of Charity of the Blessed Virgin Mary’s Mount Carmel residence and its infirmary, Marian Hall. She died there at age 96 on June 17, 2007.

Obispos de EEUU: Corte Suprema se equivoca con matrimonio gay como lo hizo con aborto
Washington, DC (ACI/EWTN Noticias)–El Presidente de la Conferencia de Obispos Católicos de Estados Unidos (USCCB), Mons. Joseph E. Kurtz, lamentó el fallo de la Corte Suprema de los Estados Unidos de América que resolvió que el matrimonio gay es un “derecho constitucional”. Asimismo, afirmó que eso es condenable y que los matrimonios homonucleares no son válidos.

Kurtz aseguró que “siempre han existido matrimonios que han sido contractados por hombres y mujeres en su estado natural, y no por un estado artificial”.

Así como rechazó las declaraciones del Presidente Obama. “Cada estadounidense tiene el derecho de elegir su propio camino, pero no tiene el derecho de imponer su propia visión sobre el resto de los ciudadanos”, dijo.

Mons. Kurtz aseguró que “no hay un único modelo de matrimonio que es ideal para todos”, y que “no hay una única definición que se aplique a todos los matrimonios”.

El prelado también se refirió a la “ecología integral” que el Papa Francisco nos ha llamado a promover. “La tarea ahora para los creyentes es formar nuestras conciencias y actuar de acuerdo a esta verdad”, declaró.

Además, Mons. Kurtz aseguró que “la elección de hoy no zanja el tema del matrimonio”, y que “el país es un error trágico que daña el bien común y lo que ‘ambos eventualmente fracasarán’.

Según informa la comunidad de Facebook “La Juventud del Papa Francisco Primero”, actualmente “circula en internet y en las redes sociales esta imagen. No nos dejemos engañar y denunciamo este tipo de abusos con nuestra fe católica.”

Pope Francis, in his great, practical sense—in the States, you have a practical sense for life, yeah?—he said three words to keep the family together: thank you, please, pardon. Thank you. Please. Pardon. He said with these three words, the family holds together. If everybody knows to say thank you, if everybody knows to say please, and if everybody knows to say, “I ask you pardon,” such a family certainly has a great future.

Annulment “Streamlining”?

Rome (Inside the Vatican)—The commission created by the Pope to change canonical processes for the possible recognition of marriage nullity has concluded its work and submitted its report to His Holiness. The changes proposed are intended to streamline procedures and make diocesan processes faster.

It is likely that the document will be issued in this direction soon, certainly before the opening of the Ordinary Synod of Bishops on the Family in October, to clear up this problem, and make sure the Synod Fathers can consider this chapter closed.

Last year’s Synod report included recommendations regarding annulments, such as “streamlining, simplified and faster canonical process; granting more authority to the local bishop; greater access of the laity as judges; and faster canonical process; granting more authority to the local bishop.”

Pope Francis, in a family certainly has a great future.

Cardinal Schönborn: Allow me to say, not the French bishops or the German bishops but some have been very explicit in proposing certain changes. It’s a big controversy, and I think it’s a necessary controversy because it’s through these controversies that there may be more clarity. The ground teaching, the basic teaching of the Church is very clear, but the deeper understanding needs growth. And therefore I think these discussions also—you may dispute about them—but they can be helpful even if they are controversial. Because it’s always through these controversies that there may be more growth. And therefore I think this will be the main message of the Synod.

And what would you say to the families of this diocese? What would be your message to them?

Pope Francis, in his great, practical sense—in the States, you have a practical sense for life, yeah?—he said three words to keep the family together: thank you, please, pardon. Thank you. Please. Pardon. He said with these three words, the family holds together. If everybody knows to say thank you, if everybody knows to say please, and if everybody knows to say, “I ask you pardon,” such a family certainly has a great future.

A Prayer of Praise to the Blessed Virgin Mary

by St. Ephraim the Syrian

O pure and immaculate and likewise blessed Virgin, who art the sinless mother of thy Son, the mighty Lord of the universe, thou who art inviolable and altogether holy, the hope of the hopeless and sinful, we sing thy praises. We bless thee, as full of every grace, thou who didst bear the God-Man: we all bow low before thee; we invoke thee and implore thine aid. Rescue us, O holy and inviolate Virgin, from every necessity that presses upon us and from all the temptations of the devil. Be our intercessor and advocate at the hour of death and judgement; deliver us from the fire that is not extinguished and from the outer darkness; make us worthy of the glory of thy Son, O dearest and most clement Virgin Mother. Thou indeed art our only hope, most sure and sacred in God’s sight. For His be the honor and glory, majesty and dominion, for ever and ever, world without end. Amen.
Washington, DC (CNA/EWTN News)—It is not discrimination for a Catholic to publicly profess his faith, Donald Cardinal Wuerl of Washington insisted in a newly released pastoral letter, “Being Catholic Today.”

“It has become increasingly apparent,” he stated, “to disparage as bigoted and mean-spirited anyone who seeks to uphold fundamental truths about the human person that have been recognized throughout history.”

The Cardinal’s pastoral echoes comments US Senator and presidential candidate Marco Rubio (R-FL) made in an interview to the Christian Broadcasting Network.

According to the May 28 Miami Herald, Rubio warned “Christianity faces a ‘real and present danger’ from same-sex marriage supporters who cast opponents as prejudiced.”

“We are at the water’s edge of the argument that mainstream Christian teaching is hate speech, because today we’ve reached the point in our society where if you do not support same-sex marriage, you are labeled a homophobic and a hater,” Rubio told David Brody, CBN News’ chief political correspondent.

“So what’s the next step after that? After they’re done going after individuals, the next step is to argue that the teachings of mainstream Christianity, the Catechism of the Catholic Church, is hate speech,” the [Catholic] Florida senator continued. ‘And that’s a real and present danger.’”

For his part, Cardinal Wuerl noted that Church teaching is rooted in an “authentic humanism” and “it is neither discrimination nor an undue imposition on the freedom of others to promote that belief and live by it.”

Published May 24, the letter outlined various challenges facing Catholics in the United States who want to practice their faith publicly.

“The faith must be lived in action because the ‘missionary activity of the Church is essential to her identity,’” he said. This is practiced through Catholic ministries to the poor, immigrants, and children.

These ministries must never be severed from the teachings of Christ, he added. “The Church is not a business, a club, or a special-interest group. Her origins are found in the will and actions of Christ.”

Yet threats loom to the practice of the faith because some wish to impose a secular morality on everyone, including Catholics, he explained. This would include a forced “tolerance” for acts such as abortion or sexual activity that contradicts Church teaching.

As a primary example of this threat, the Cardinal cited two Washington, DC, laws. One, the Reproductive Health Non-Discrimination Amendment Act, mandates that employers, including religious and pro-life organizations, are not free to hire and retain only those employees who do not publicly contradict their mission.

The other law, the Human Rights Amendment Act, forces religious schools to “endorse, fund, or provide other assistance for the promotion of sexual conduct contrary to their faith and moral beliefs,” he stated.

In both cases, Catholic institutions that live their faith by serving the poor are being forced to violate Church teaching. The Washington archdiocese led an effort to oppose the laws, which were passed the city council and signed by the mayor in January.

An effort to disapprove of the laws passed the House but not the Senate, ultimately failing to stop the laws from going into full effect. Catholic and pro-life organizations in the city now might fight the laws in court if a discrimination lawsuit is brought against them.

Cardinal Wuerl listed other threats to religious liberty, such as demands that Catholic teachers be able to contradict Church teaching in their words and actions.

“This battle is being waged in San Francisco by opponents of Archbishop Salvatore Cordileone’s move to clarify Church teaching in employee handbooks for diocesan teachers. This included statements of Church teaching on sexual ethics and assisted reproductive technology,” the letter states.

A campaign against the archbishop’s actions was launched, including a public letter from Bay Area Catholics to Pope Francis to remove Archbishop Cordileone.

“The mission of the Church is precisely this: To represent the will and actions of Christ. “Whatever we can do for the poor and the little ones is part of the mission of Jesus Christ … the first step is to realize that Jesus has come, as He says, for the sick, for those who are in need, not for the healthy,” he said.

“The mission of the Church is precisely this: To represent this to the world, and especially to those who are most wounded.”

“Some now wrongly claim it is discrimination for the Church to insist that those who teach in Catholic schools present Catholic teaching in word and in witness,” Cardinal Wuerl stated.

“As Catholics, who we are cannot be separated from how we live, Jesus taught us to feed the hungry, shelter the homeless, and care for the sick and those in need, and the Catholic Church’s history of educating and serving the poor is long and well-known.”

Catholics can show love to everyone, without approving of sin, he explained.

“We can embrace someone who has had an abortion. But we cannot proclaim that the killing of a child in the womb is good. For someone to insist that we do so under the guise of avoiding ‘discrimination’ is unjust.”

Rather than an objective judgement of an action, “discrimination” is actually something very different, and something the Church has abhorred through the ages.

“In an age when the prevailing society treated some people like property, the first Christians saw slaves and nobles as brothers and sisters in Christ,” Cardinal Wuerl wrote. In modern times, Catholics helped the civil rights movement obtain equal rights for Americans of all races, he added.

“Prejudice and discrimination are wrong because they divide the human family, violate fundamental human dignity and are contrary to the truth and charity to which we are all called,” he continued.

Yet although the Church embraces all sinners, it cannot approve of sin, he added. “Jesus did not change his message just because some who heard it felt it was a ‘hard saying’.”

“No one should be surprised that the Church continues to be faithful to Jesus’ Gospel – his teaching,” he added.

“After all, it is his message, his Church. We are not free to change either.”

The Church is not imposing its will on everyone, he added, but rather seeks the freedom for Catholics to practice their faith publicly.

Pontifical University Plans to Offer Diploma in Child Protection by 2016

Rome (CNA/EWTN News)—Beginning in spring 2016, Rome’s Pontifical Gregorian University will begin offering an intensive one-semester diploma program on the safeguarding of minors and the prevention of sex abuse by clergy.

“There are not courses like this diploma in pontifical universities and in the UK have them, but (this is a) first in pontifical and Catholic universities,” Fr. Hans Zollner, SJ, said at the June 24 announcement of the course.

Fr. Zollner is president of the Pontifical Gregorian University’s Center for Child Protection (CCP) and is a member of the Pontifical Commission for the Protection of the Minors, created by Pope Francis last autumn.

The program aims to form persons who will eventually become child protection officers for dioceses, religious congregations, and similar organizations, as well as advisors and trainers in the field of safeguarding.

Seminars will delve into topics including terms and definitions surrounding the protection of minors, child rights, development and safety, safeguarding and prevention, theology, truth and justice, and care for those who have been abused.

The fact that the Church acts on this issue not out of legal binding but out of belief in her mission is something Fr. Zollner said is “not really appreciated or even understood.”

“What we can do for the poor and the little ones is not part of the mission of Jesus Christ … the first step is to realize that Jesus has come, as He says, for the sick, for those who are in need, not for the healthy,” he said.

“The mission of the Church is precisely this: To represent this to the world, and especially to those who are most wounded.”
I woke up this morning with a clear memory of my departed brother's face in my mind. He was smiling, I was so thankful for it because even seeing a picture isn't the same as a clear picture in your mind. So I woke up thankful. And that's a nice way to wake up.

It's an odd thing about losing a loved one. When they pass away, you can't imagine them not being in this world; it's that you can't understand the world going on without them. I remember when my brother passed away, I walked outside the hospice and was surprised to see cars zooming by and even clouds moving. You can't quite believe everything and everyone is acting like the most important thing in the world didn't just happen. And there's a part of you that can't quite forgive the world for turning.
The hard part is seeing the world not take notice while believing that not a single sparrow can fall to the ground without the Father knowing it. That is the disconnect Christians have with the world. We're called to take part in it but not be of it. But Christians are good at accepting mysteries. It's not without pain, but we understand it comes with the territory.

Sometimes when we're in pain we just put a face on and just keep going. Sometimes we pretend so well that we forget we're pretending. Maybe it makes it easier. It's a funny thing. We're all out there pretending like the most important things in the world didn't just happen. And there's a part of you that can't quite forgive the world for turning.

But it's not. I pray that wed all be not so good at pretending. We should admit sometimes that our worlds have fallen apart and looks to be doing so even now. And we're quite frankly not all that pleased about it. Maybe sometimes we even need to ask for help picking up all the pieces.

That's another funny thing. Why is it so much easier to give help than to receive it? A wonderfully holy priest I met recently spoke of his father who had to nurse his wife for many years after she'd gotten into a car accident. Someone once praised his father for his dutifulness in caring for his wife. But his father responded by saying he had the easy part. He simply had to help. She had the harder part in letting him help her.

There's a lot of truth in that.

Maybe part of being Christian is not just offering help to the hungry and the suffering but admitting sometimes that we are the hungry and suffering. It's ironic in that sometimes the more we're broken, the less likely we are to ask for help in picking up the pieces.

I know when people ask me how I'm doing I answer "fine." It's an unthinking response. I don't want to burden you with my burdens. That sometimes can be a false kindness to the world because it precludes other people's opportunity to show kindness to you. Part of truly loving is offering other people an opportunity to serve and love.

I remember one time my car broke down on the highway, and I was walking to a gas station. A man in a truck pulled over and asked if I needed a lift. He said "How ya' doin?"

I said, "Fine." I wasn't fine at all. I was walking down the side of a highway. He asked me if I needed help, and I said, "I got it." He smiled, shook his head, and finally said, "Let me help your fellow man." I noticed a big cross hanging from his rearview. He took me to the gas station and even used his own gas can. When he was done filling up my tank he thanked me. Sometimes, maybe the kindest thing we can do is allow others to help. Maybe the kindest thing to do is tell others we're not fine.

Let's be honest. Let's stop seeming all Facebooky and just showing the good parts of our life.

I'll be honest. Today I woke up grateful for having a clear picture of my smiling brother in my mind. But I'm missing him terribly. ❖

Justin-Siena High School News

A New Principal for the Braves

Napa (Avanti)—Justin-Siena has named Mr. John Bordelon as its new principal.

No stranger to Catholic education in the Lasallian tradition, Mr. Bordelon has most recently served as the vice president of Christian Brothers High School (CBHS), a Lasallian school in Memphis.

Prior to that, Mr. Bordelon served CBHS as associate principal as well as director of Admission and Enrollment. As such, he is a well-prepared administrator who comes to school leadership first and foremost as a teacher. Even as vice president at CBHS, Mr. Bordelon continued teaching Advanced Placement United States History.

Mr. Bordelon describes his leadership style as “about love and humility coupled with relentless pursuit of community potential,” and is excited to guide Justin-Siena to new heights. This puts his educational philosophy in alignment with Justin-Siena’s vision and future plans.

He says, “Pursuit of traditional achievement is a given, but documented growth is the true definition of excellence. A growth-focused culture … maintains the highest of standards while individualizing the student experience – finding just the right tension to stretch capacity.”

Given the diverse nature of Justin-Siena’s student population, Mr. Bordelon’s vast experience will serve his administration well. He has designed programs both for gifted students and those who struggle. He holds a BA in history from Rhodes College, an MA in teaching and an MS in educational leadership from Christian Brothers University, and a MEd in private school leadership from Columbia University in New York.

Mr. Bordelon is married to Lauren and the couple has two young children.

School President Robert Jordan shared, “I look forward to partnering with Mr. Bordelon in this important and sacred work and to hearing his ideas and supporting his efforts. I feel confident in his ability to lead us as a learning and faith community. I appreciate his enthusiasm for this opportunity to serve, and I have no doubt that it will translate into a commitment in making Justin-Siena an even better school and experience for those entrusted to our care.”

Napa Supervisors Honor Braves Baseball Team

At its meeting on June 23, the Napa County Board of Supervisors honored the Justin-Siena High School baseball team, the 2015 CIF North Coast Section Division IV champion.

The Braves (17-10 overall) received a proclamation from the supervisors, who proclaimed June 23 as “Justin-Siena Baseball Team Day” in Napa County.

“It was very nice,” said Justin-Siena Coach Allen Rossi, who is assisted by Jim Campbell, Spencer Czekalewski, Tim Malloy, and Greg Evans. “I spoke about our team, the accomplishment of winning that Section championship.”

The main hall and the activity rooms were decorated with impressive mountain décor. As one entered into the hall, they went through the base camp, which was festooned with boots, backpacks, picks, shovels, and coats.

Then they entered the main hall area, which was decorated with an amazing array of snowflakes, 3D mountain-tops, and mountain animals around icy mounds of fake snow. Each of the activity rooms was decorated with rocks, snow, and snowflakes to give participants the real feeling of being in the mountains.

The day was further broken up with “mountaintop treats,” namely, snacks and water. The sessions ended just as they began, with everyone singing and praying together. In addition, participants brought in their plastic and metal bottles and cans throughout the week to contribute to the parish’s ongoing African Mission campaign.

Overall it was a week of fun, activity, music, prayer, and inspiration that Jesus is indeed with us and will help us all the time. “The Power of God” and “Hold on to God” were constant themes each day.

A special thanks to Dominic Figueroa, the parish’s interim youth minister, the youth ministry team, and all the volunteers and donors for a memorable week.

St. Eugene School Students Thrive in Summer School

Santa Rosa—The youngsters in St. Eugene’s annual summer school have stayed sharp by reading some well-known books.

As part of the social studies unit, children learned about the various authors and studied either the state or the country where the author is from. For example, in The Story about Ping by Marjorie Flack, the students read about Ping, a spirited little duck who lives on a boat on the Yangtze River in China. This gave teacher Amy Parsons the perfect opportunity to teach her students a little about the “Middle Kingdom.”

Student’s writing skills were also enhanced by doing “summary writing,” an important component of Common Core. One child summarized Clifford the Big Red Dog by noticing that Clifford made mistakes and also tried to do good deeds. The Curious George series and the longtime favorite book Corduroy also helped teach the kids summary writing.

In Blueberries for Sal by Robert McCloskey, the children polished their math skills by writing about how many blueberries Sal picked minus how many the bear ate. Make Way for Ducklings by Robert McCloskey was a fun opportunity for students to paint some ducks and ducklings using their hand and fingers as a template.

Author Eric Carle has so many books about insects, but a popular one is The Very Hungry Caterpillar. The students certainly had fun learning about some of Mr. Carle’s main characters, such as spiders, grasshoppers, ladybugs, and caterpillars.

The curriculum ended with Arnold Lobel’s Frog and Toad, which tell the stories of amphibian best friends who are always there for each other.

Research shows that in order to succeed in school and life, children need ongoing opportunities to learn and practice essential skills. This is especially true during the summer months. Yet young people experience learning losses when they do not engage in educational activities during the summer. For instance, studies show most students lose about two months of grade level equivalency in mathematical computation skills over the summer.

During summer school at St. Eugene School, the children were given enriching experiences along with many happy times to ensure they are ready for school this fall.

For instance, studies show most students lose about two months of grade level equivalency in mathematical computation skills over the summer.

During summer school at St. Eugene School, the children were given enriching experiences along with many happy times to ensure they are ready for school this fall.

Santa Rosa—The youngsters in St. Eugene’s annual summer school have stayed sharp by reading some well-known books.

As part of the social studies unit, children learned about the various authors and studied either the state or the country where the author is from. For example, in The Story about Ping by Marjorie Flack, the students read about Ping, a spirited little duck who lives on a boat on the Yangtze River in China. This gave teacher Amy Parsons the perfect opportunity to teach her students a little about the “Middle Kingdom.”

Student’s writing skills were also enhanced by doing “summary writing,” an important component of Common Core. One child summarized Clifford the Big Red Dog by noticing that Clifford made mistakes and also tried to do good deeds. The Curious George series and the longtime favorite book Corduroy also helped teach the kids summary writing.

In Blueberries for Sal by Robert McCloskey, the children polished their math skills by writing about how many blueberries Sal picked minus how many the bear ate. Make Way for Ducklings by Robert McCloskey was a fun opportunity for students to paint some ducks and ducklings using their hand and fingers as a template.

Author Eric Carle has so many books about insects, but a popular one is The Very Hungry Caterpillar. The students certainly had fun learning about some of Mr. Carle’s main characters, such as spiders, grasshoppers, ladybugs, and caterpillars.

The curriculum ended with Arnold Lobel’s Frog and Toad, which tell the stories of amphibian best friends who are always there for each other.

Research shows that in order to succeed in school and life, children need ongoing opportunities to learn and practice essential skills. This is especially true during the summer months. Yet young people experience learning losses when they do not engage in educational activities during the summer. For instance, studies show most students lose about two months of grade level equivalency in mathematical computation skills over the summer.
